Home Health Technology Leader Axxess Acquires Home Health Gold

David Merk to Remain as Home Health Gold President and CEO

DALLAS, March 13, 2018 – Axxess, the fastest-growing home health technology company, has acquired healthcare data analytics and software leader Home Health Gold.

Axxess founder and CEO John Olajide said David Merk will remain as Home Health Gold's President and CEO.

"Since partnering with David to incorporate Home Health Gold into Axxess software, I have been impressed by the Home Health Gold technology and David's commitment to providing the best data analysis tools," Olajide said. "With David's continued leadership and Axxess' market leadership, we look forward to helping more home health providers benefit from Home Health Gold's capabilities."

Added Merk: "John and Axxess have been wonderful partners, and I look forward to being part of the Axxess family. Its leadership in innovation and extraordinary culture make it the perfect fit for helping take Home Health Gold to the next level."

Merk created Home Health Gold in 1997 to help home health organizations organize vast data into easy-to-access reports that improve day-to-day decision-making. Home Health Gold combines financial, clinical, and operational data to provide a complete range of information needed to successfully guide home health organizations. Based in Waterville, Maine, Home Health Gold serves organizations nationwide, including many of the large Visiting Nurse Associations.
